

Contents

List of figures	ix
List of tables.....	xi
Abstract.....	xii
1. Introduction.....	1
2. Previous studies of the officers and their households	3
2.1 The Roman auxiliary units	3
2.2 The auxiliary command	3
2.3 Commander numbers and promotion prospects	4
2.4 Ages and social background	4
2.5 Previous studies of the commanders' households.....	5
2.6 Officers' households and traditional views of Roman military frontiers.....	7
2.7 Military communities, households, and discipline	7
2.8 Roman women's letters, literacy and power.....	9
2.9 A diplomat's personal perspective	10
2.10 Conclusions.....	11
3. Inscriptional evidence for the officers' families.....	13
3.1 Introduction.....	13
3.2 Finding epigraphic evidence for household members other than the officers	14
3.3 Dating and other biases in this inscription set	14
3.4 Characterising the inscriptional evidence.....	15
3.5. Four case studies	18
3.5.1 Aurelius Concordius.....	18
3.5.2 Aureliae Ammae(?)	20
3.5.3 Fabia Bira, flaminica prima	21
3.5.4 Eutyclus, Rufinus trib and Lucilla eius	24
3.6 Relationship between this set of inscriptions and officers' household members.....	24
3.7 Freedwomen as wives	26
3.8 Demographic modelling compared with the inscriptional evidence	26
3.8.1 Relationship of Roman funerary commemorations to age at death.....	26
3.8.2 Inscriptions as evidence for age of death for officers and their households	27
3.8.3 Age of death and implications for the wives' life expectancy	28
3.9 Age at marriage	28
3.9.1 First militia, first marriage?.....	32
3.9.2 Marriages made in legions?	32
3.10 Dedicators' roles within auxiliary commanders' households in military contexts	33
3.10.1 Officers and wives as commissioners of inscriptions in military contexts	34
3.10.2 Children as commissioners within officers' households.....	37
3.11 Conclusions.....	38
4. The auxiliary commander and his wife's servile households at the fort.....	41
4.1 Introduction.....	41
4.2 Finding servile inscriptions at forts and fortresses	41
4.3. Three case studies:	42
4.3.1 Saturninus – a commander's probable slave at Sacidava fort.....	42
4.3.2 Eutyclus and his household at High Rochester fort	42
4.3.3. Statilius Fortunatus – a self-depiction on his patron's stele at Mogontiacum fortress?.....	42
4.4. Characterising the inscriptional evidence for freedmen and slaves of equestrian commanders in military contexts	44
4.5 Centurions' slave and freed household members	46
4.6 Inscriptional evidence for enslaved and freed members of the commanders' households within towns	48

4.7 Evidence from the Vindolanda tablets	51
4.8 Comparisons with senatorial and imperial households	52
4.9 Conclusions.....	53
5. The household’s accommodation; praetorium and tribune house inscriptions	55
5.1 Introduction.....	55
5.2 Identifying and defining praetoria	55
5.3 Public, private or repräsentativ spaces?	57
5.4 Dedications genio domus as evidence for legionary tribunes’ houses and dedications genio praetorii	58
5.4.1 Dedications genio domus	58
5.4.2 Dedications genio praetorii	59
5.5 Conclusions.....	61
6. The household’s accommodation; fort praetoria and ‘tribune houses’ at fortresses	63
6.1 Introduction.....	63
6.2 The evidential base: literature survey, problems of evidence recovery, selection methods and biases	66
6.3 Site types and garrisons	67
6.4 Dating the evidence	68
6.5 Geographical distribution	69
6.6 Whose building?	69
6.7 Relationship between the praetorium and principia	70
6.8 An appropriate military building?.....	71
6.9 A courtyard house accommodating military activities.....	72
6.10. A luxury building?	73
6.11 Baths and hypocausts.....	74
6.12 Small rooms, upper stories, corridors and guest accommodation	76
6.13 Kitchens and latrines.....	80
6.14 Conclusions.....	81
7. Letters from Vindolanda	85
7.1 Introduction.....	85
7.2 The Vindolanda writing tablets archaeological contexts and dates	85
7.3 A ‘military community’ approach to the Vindolanda tablets	86
7.4 Epistolary conventions evident within the letters	87
7.5. The ‘letter proper’	91
7.5.1 Usefulness of close textual readings	91
7.5.2 Status and roles of scribes.....	93
7.6 Subscriptiones and autograph writing	97
7.7 Epistolary self-revelation and gender in the construction of friendships between officers’ households	102
7.8 Conclusions	103
8. Conclusions.....	105
Appendix A: Index of household members.....	109
Appendix B: Summary of praetoria and tribune houses data from archaeological reports	119
Appendices C-I (Online only) - https://doi.org/10.30861/9781407361437-Appendix-Contents
Appendix C: Biographies of household members - https://doi.org/10.30861/9781407361437-AppendixC
Appendix D: Household members inscriptions with translations - https://doi.org/10.30861/9781407361437-AppendixD
Appendix E: Aelii Antipatres at Apulum - https://doi.org/10.30861/9781407361437-AppendixE
Appendix F: Praetoria and tribune house plans and images - https://doi.org/10.30861/9781407361437-AppendixF
Appendix G: Praetorium inscriptions discussed in Chapter Six - https://doi.org/10.30861/9781407361437-AppendixG
Appendix H: Praetoria and tribune house data - https://doi.org/10.30861/9781407361437-AppendixH
Appendix I: Scribes and letter writers at Vindolanda - https://doi.org/10.30861/9781407361437-AppendixI
Bibliography	123