

Contents

List of figures	xv
List of tables.....	xvii
Abstract	xviii
1. Setting.....	1
1.1. The Wodehouse District.....	3
1.2. Towards a plexus of performances	7
2. Performance: a coordinating theory	9
2.1. Performance theory.....	9
2.1.1. Definition and contestation	9
2.1.2. Features of performances	10
2.2. Performance in rock art research.....	12
2.3. Totus mundus agit historionem	12
2.4. Operationalising performance theory	14
3. San performances.....	15
3.1. Context and content	15
3.2. Healing.....	16
3.2.1. Healing dances	17
3.2.2. Healing as display	18
3.2.3. Southern San healing practices	21
3.2.4. ‘The initiated’ and ‘secret things’.....	23
3.3. Southern San rock paintings	24
3.4. Principles of healing	24
4. Storytelling.....	27
4.1. Narrative performances recorded in text	27
4.2. Two versions of a narrative.....	30
4.3. Principles of storytelling.....	30
5. Observations of image-making	35
5.1. Documentary sources.....	35
5.1.1. ‘A young San man called Sam’	36
5.1.2. George Stow’s records	37
5.1.3. The Reverend Dornan’s writings	38
5.1.4. BaSotho, BaThembu and BaPhuthi accounts	38
5.1.5. Maqoqa and Sister Mariya	42
5.2. Image-making communities	44
6. Contested images?.....	45
6.1. Criticisms and counter-criticisms	46
6.2. Art-historical approaches	47
6.2.1. Art-historical approaches in practice	49
6.3. Anthropological approaches	52
6.4. Principles of rock painting.....	55
6.5. Performances of image-making	55
7. The painted sequence.....	57
7.1. The wider Maloti-Drakensberg sequence	57
7.2. The Wodehouse District sequence	58
7.2.1. Shaded polychrome phase.....	59
7.2.2. Late shaded polychrome phase	59

7.2.3. Hard-edged phase.....	59
7.2.4. Colonial-era rock arts.....	63
7.3. From shaded polychrome to hard-edged	64
7.3.1. Two hypotheses.....	68
7.4. Signs of the times: a changing social landscape	70
8. A changing audience	71
8.1. Changing notions of alterity	72
8.1.1. Alterity before contact.....	72
8.1.2. Alterity in a changing world	74
8.1.3. Three contact scenarios.....	75
8.2. Novel subject matter in the Wodehouse District.....	77
8.3. New images, new performances	86
9. Bloody binders and a new colour palette.....	87
9.1. Pigments and binders	87
9.1.1. Binders: the visual effects of fat and blood.....	88
9.1.2. Ethnohistorical evidence.....	90
9.1.3. New opportunities.....	91
9.2. A new colour palette	91
9.2.1. A question of fire?	91
9.2.2. Geological sources of yellow pigments	92
9.3. People, pigments and paints	94
10. Meaningful colours and the hard edges between them	95
10.1. Red and yellow pigments.....	95
10.2. Cross-cultural engagements.....	96
10.2.1. Mines and commodities	97
10.3. ‘Gold’: trade in yellow pigments.....	97
10.3.1. Hunter-gatherer trading partners?	98
10.3.2. An ancient trade network?	99
10.4. A new way of seeing.....	100
10.4.1. Boundaries: social, conceptual and painted.....	100
10.5. Cui bono?	101
11. Painted emphasis: ‘kainjatara was yellow; Yolk was yellow’	103
11.1. Rock paintings of felines	103
11.2. Historical distributions.....	106
11.3. Polysemic pairs: felines and antelope.....	106
11.4. Yellow felines, yellow antelope	112
11.4.1. Felines in thought and belief.....	112
11.4.2. A leonine world.....	115
11.5. The meaning of yellow	117
11.5.1. Yellow felines.....	118
11.5.2. Yellow antelope: honey-coloured animals	119
11.6. Cui bono?	120
12. Rainmaking performances.....	121
12.1. Rain: water, animal, personified	121
12.1.1. Rain-animals: male and female.....	122
12.1.2. !Khwa:’s creatures and women.....	122
12.2. Formal and informal rain practices.....	123
12.2.1. !Xam rain rituals.....	123
12.2.2. Informal rain practices	124
12.3. Using n!ao : passive ability and influential force	125
12.4. Performative ‘magic’	127
13. Painting the rain.....	129
13.1. Rock paintings of one-horned rain-animals.....	130
13.2. A series of repeated features	130

13.3. Rainmaking scenes from the Wodehouse District	135
13.4. Hunting the rain: separation from the herd.....	139
13.5. Image-making and n!ao	142
14. Rock paintings and a plexus of performances.....	145
14.1. An extraordinary panel	147
14.1.1. The first conceptual set: dancing and trancing.....	148
14.1.2. The second conceptual set: girls' puberty and healing	151
14.1.3. The third conceptual set: lines, snakes and rain.....	156
14.2. A place for everything.....	160
14.3. Performance: participation and manifestation	161
14.3.1. Image-making performances	162
References.....	163
Appendix One	189
Appendix Two.....	193
Index	197