

Contents

List of Figures	ix
List of Tables	xvii
Preface	xviii
1. Groundwork of Violence: Archaeology, Memory and the Camp Landscape	1
Introduction	1
1.1 Internment Camps	2
1.2 Historical Context.....	2
1.3 General Considerations	4
1.4 Research Base.....	6
1.5 Archaeology of War and Terror	8
1.5.1 Perspectives on Memory.....	8
1.5.2 Perspectives on Methodology and Legitimation.....	8
1.5.3 Perspectives on People and Material	10
1.5.4 Perspectives on Violence and War	11
1.5.5 Archaeology and Politics: A New Challenge?	12
1.6 Research versus Preservation? Approaches in Archaeological Heritage Conservation	12
Conclusions.....	13
2. The Historical Development of Camp Systems	15
Introduction.....	15
2.1 Prisoner-of-War Camps of the 1870–71 War	15
2.2 Prisoner-of-War Camps of the First World War.....	16
2.3 Internment Camps of the 1920s.....	16
2.4 Labour Camps of Jewish Aid Organisations	16
2.5 Camps of National Socialist Organisations	17
2.6 Early Concentration Camps	17
2.7 Concentration Camps and Satellite Camps.....	17
2.8 Forced Labour Camps	17
2.9 Labour Education Camps	17
2.10 Prisoner-of-War Camps	17
2.11 Extermination Sites.....	18
2.12 Red Army Forest Camps.....	18
2.13 Soviet Special Camps	18
2.14 Camps for Returnees and Displaced Persons	18
2.15 Prison Camps in the Context of the German Democratic Republic (GDR) and the Cold War	19
2.16 Border Installations of the Cold War	19
Conclusions.....	19
3. Research Histories and Archaeologies of the Camp	21
Introduction.....	21
3.1 The Initial Phase	21
3.2 The Orientation Phase.....	22
3.2.1 Sachsenhausen and Ravensbrück	22
3.2.2 The Uckermark Camp.....	22
3.2.3 Eisenhüttenstadt	23
3.3 The Consolidation Phase	23
3.3.1 Luckenwalde.....	23
3.3.2 Rathenow	23
3.3.3 Kleinmachnow	24
3.4 Parallel Worlds.....	24
3.4.1 Treuenbrietzen.....	24
3.4.2 Mühlberg.....	25

3.5 The Routine Phase	25
3.6 The Initiative Phase	25
3.6.1 The Mahlow Hospital for Foreigners.....	26
3.6.2 The Glienicke-Nordbahn Escape Tunnel	26
3.6.3 The Red Army Forest Camps.....	26
3.6.4 The Wünsdorf Halbmondlager.....	26
3.7 Responsibilities and Challenges in Contemporary Heritage Work	27
4. Internment Camps as Archaeological Sites	29
Introduction.....	29
4.1 From Concept to Criteria: Archaeology and the Camp Site.....	29
4.2 From Sites to Surveys: Archaeological Investigations in Practice	30
Conclusions.....	31
5. Traces and Structures: Archaeological Features of the Camp Landscape.....	35
Introduction.....	35
5.1 Camp Layout	35
5.2 Classification of Camp Structures	37
5.2.1 Camp Boundary: Wall, Gate, Towers and Fence	41
5.2.2 Camp Fences and Internal Demarcations	41
5.2.3 Functional Buildings	43
5.2.4 Barracks and Their Foundations	53
5.2.5 Sanitary Areas	64
5.2.6 Tent Locations.....	64
5.2.7 Religious Buildings.....	65
5.2.8 Infrastructure: Water, Waste Water and Electricity Pipelines	65
5.2.9 Infrastructure: Roads, Paths, Open Spaces and Paving	72
5.2.10 Levelling and Fire Layers	73
5.2.11 Underground Structures	76
5.2.12 Fire-Water Ponds.....	77
5.2.13 Splinter and Air-Raid Protection Trenches	78
5.2.14 Waste Pits	79
5.2.15 Execution and Cremation Areas.....	82
Conclusions.....	86
6. Artefacts of Confinement: Typology, Use and Memory in the Camps.....	89
Introduction.....	89
6.1 Typology and Material Composition of Artefacts	90
6.2 Ceramic Artefacts	90
6.2.1 Canteen Crockery	91
6.2.2 Ceramic Building Material	95
6.2.3 Dental Ceramics	98
6.2.4 Personal Items.....	99
6.3 Glass Artefacts.....	100
6.3.1 Glass Containers and Bottles	100
6.3.2 Flat Glass	102
6.3.3 Personal Items	104
6.4 Metal Artefacts.....	105
6.4.1 Aluminium Production in Germany	105
6.4.2 Containers and Crockery.....	106
6.4.3 Large Kitchen Vessels.....	107
6.4.4 Dining and Cooking Utensils	107
6.4.5 Tin Boxes and Other Handmade Containers.....	108
6.4.6 Sugar Bowls and Multi-purpose Tins	110
6.4.7 Kitchen and Dining Cutlery.....	113
6.4.8 Building Accessories.....	114
6.4.9 Artefacts of Camp Administration	118
6.4.10 Marking and Identification Objects	122
6.4.11 Production Residues.....	124
6.4.12 Clothing and Uniform Components	126

6.4.13 Body Care and Hygiene Items	127
6.4.14 Personal Items	129
6.5 Plastic Artefacts	134
6.5.1 Plastic Production in Germany	134
6.5.2 Bakelite and Plastic Containers	135
6.5.3 Insulation Boards	136
6.5.4 Artefacts of Camp Administration	136
6.5.5 Body Care and Hygiene Items	138
6.5.6 Personal Items	141
6.5.7 Miscellaneous Finds	142
6.6 Textile Artefacts	142
6.7 Artefacts Made from Other Materials	143
6.7.1 Wood	143
6.7.2 Paper	144
Conclusions	144
7. Material Evidence and Camp Systems: Identifying Groups through Archaeology	145
Introduction	145
7.1 Material Evidence and Camp Systems: Identifying Groups through Archaeology	146
7.1.1 Features	146
7.1.2 Finds	146
7.2 Material Evidence and Functional Shifts: Survival through Objects	147
Conclusions	149
8. Carriers of Identity: Material Traces of Individual Lives	151
Introduction	151
8.1 Names	151
8.1.1 Adrema Plates from Sebalduhof Treuenbrietzen	151
8.1.1.1 What Do the Plates Say?	151
8.1.1.2 Analysing the Name Database	153
8.1.1.3 Dates of Employment	156
8.1.1.4 Gender Distribution	156
8.1.1.5 Origins	157
8.1.1.6 Dates of Birth	158
8.1.1.7 Occupational Structures and Remuneration	159
8.1.1.8 Addresses	160
8.1.1.9 Group Arrivals	160
8.1.1.10 Shared Names and Possible Family Ties	161
8.1.1.11 The Historical Value of Archaeological Evidence	162
8.1.2 Adrema Plates from Brandenburg-Neuendorf Arado Plant	163
8.1.3 Arado ID Cards from the Rathenow Factory	165
8.2 Personal Stories of Dutch Forced Labourers	168
8.2.1 Cornelis Kees de Looze and His Letters from Sebalduhof	168
8.2.2 Gerald van Loon and His Tin Can	170
8.3 Are There Traces of Jewish Life?	170
8.3.1 The Klandorf Waste Pit Near Groß Schönebeck (Barnim)	170
8.3.2 Pogrom Archaeology in Neuruppin	171
8.3.3 Hachshara in the High Fläming	172
8.3.4 Pogrom Archaeology? A Menorah in Schwedt, Uckermark District	174
8.3.5 Shoah Archaeology: Finds from the Jamlitz–Lieberose Subcamp, Dahme–Spreewald District	175
8.3.6 Methodological Thoughts	178
8.4 Red Army Soldiers at the End of the Second World War: An Archaeological Perspective	179
8.4.1 Groups, Movements and Identities	179
8.4.2 Migrations	180
8.4.3 Archaeological Evidence: Features	180
8.4.3.1 Barbed Wire and Soviet Prisoner-of-War Camps	180
8.4.3.2 Pile-Grid Foundations and Forced Labour Camps	181
8.4.3.3 Block Buildings: Zemlyanki in Red Army Forest Camps	182
8.4.4 Archaeological Evidence: Finds	184
8.4.4.1 Military Objects and Personal Inscriptions	183

8.4.4.2 Stalag tags: Registration and Administration	184
8.4.4.3 Loot: Watches, Fittings and Bicycles	186
8.4.4.4 Soviet Stars and Other Motifs	186
8.4.4.5 Tin Boxes and Tokens of Survival	187
8.4.4.6 Wehrmacht Belt Buckles as Symbols of Victory	188
Conclusions.....	189
9. Spheres of Life in the Camps: Administration, Survival and Systematic Control	191
Introduction.....	191
9.1 Administration: Infrastructure, Equipment, Surveillance and Violence	191
9.2 Provisioning: Nutrition, Intake, Distribution and Deficiency	194
9.3 Supply: Clothing, Personal Hygiene and Medicine	196
9.4 Assurance: Self-Assertion, Identity Protection, Quality of Life and Demonstration	196
9.5 Exploitation: Production, Profiteers, Adaptations and Parallel Worlds	198
9.6 Resolution: Hope, Liberation, Erasure and Remembrance	198
9.7 Repatriates in the Red Army Forest Camps	201
10. Memory Work: Archaeology and the Legacy of the Camps	203
Introduction.....	203
10.1 Collective Memory and Places of Remembrance	203
10.2 Remembrance Work and Contemporary Historical Archaeology	205
11. Brandenburg Catalogue (available online only at https://doi.org/10.30861/9781407362830-Catalogue)
Bibliography	207